

Quick Bio

I received my Masters of Professional Writing (2006) and Master of Science in Education (1995) degrees from the University of Southern California, where I also worked for 16 years as a computer/technical consultant, writer/editor, webmaster and instructional technologist. I also have extensive writing experience in a wide variety of business and educational settings. I have also been taking professional development classes at San Diego Mesa College and Palomar College since 2015 in web design, graphic communication, multimedia and various writing for media and journalism classes.

I have been an equestrian riding instructor for 14 years at the Los Angeles Equestrian Center where I taught dressage and combined training as well as designed educational programs and websites, edited an equestrian newsletter, established a student riding club, and published articles in top equestrian magazines.

Since 2002, I have worked full-time as an adjunct faculty at several online colleges, where I taught graduate educational technology classes for 17 years and undergraduate writing courses such as Advanced Technical Writing, Advanced Business Writing, Communication in Healthcare, and English Composition I & II classes. For 10 years, I was a writing tutor at an online college writing center where I tutored undergraduate and graduate students in all stages of the writing and citation process.

I enjoy reading and writing Victorian/Edwardian period mystery novels and writing flash fiction and radio dramas. I produce flash fiction audio stories with narration, film music and sound effects for my stories2music project (s2m), which includes the s2m website, its social media sites, the s2m blog and podcasts.
